Abstract: The speech will be about how the politicians may deal with death when they take decisions for millions of people regarding wars, terrorism, violence, health system and other critical issues which involve life and death.

Is there any point of taking political decisions after which it may means that the death of politics will follow?

There will be also some remarks about the personal experiences facing death during the Romanian anti-communist Revolution in December 1989 and the war in Yugoslavia in April-May 1999.
